Assignment 02 Report

Part A: Class Guidelines

It is extremely important to convey to someone what you are doing while writing your code. If someone who knows nothing about what you are writing your program on comes and checks your work they should be able to follow your thinking and code. You can accomplish this by consistency, a class design guideline which focuses on consistency of naming conventions, constructors and other methods throughout all classes and programs. It is good practice to follow the proper naming conventions to identify what type of value it holds. For example, a variable has the first word lowercase and the next word's first letter uppercase(helloWorld) and a class name has all the words' first letter uppercase(HelloWorld). It is also important to write comments to explain your code. We have to document everything to communicate with others. This is extremely important when multiple people are working on one project. In this case it would be a problem if one person does not understand what you have written, it would be a mess essentially. When I started coding, it was annoying to comment and document my code but I realized it's importance when I did a program long ago and when I came back to it after a long time, I was unable to remember what this was about. Therefore, it is extremely important to document and be consistent throughout your classes and projects. Let me give you a piece of code to show its demonstration:

// Imports the Scanner class from the java util package.(COMMENTS)
import java.util.Scanner;

// Creates public class KnockKnock(COMMENTS/Description) public class KnockKnock { (Pascal case naming convention) // main method(COMMENTS/Documentation)
   public static void main(String[] args){
       // Declares and initializes input as the predefined(COMMENTS)
       // input from the user.(COMMENTS)
       Scanner input = new Scanner(System.in);(Camel case naming convention)
       System.out.println("Knock, knock");
       // Takes input from the user.(COMMENTS)
       String answer1 = input.nextLine();
       System.out.println("Annie");
       // Takes input from the user.(COMMENTS)
       String answer2 = input.nextLine();
       System.out.println("Annie thing you can do I can do better");

Inheritance and Aggregation are big parts of java and object oriented programming. It is the difference between an in-a relationship and a has-a relationship. An is-a relationship in java is when a class inherits the properties of another class using the java keyword extends. We usually call the inheritance of classes as an is-a relationship because it is an extension of the superclass. The superclass is the parent class and the sub-class is the child class. One way to give an example of inheritance is by saying an apple is-a fruit or a tiger is an animal. There can be multiple subclasses of a superclass, but there can only be one superclass of a subclass. The subclass inherits all of the data fields and methods of the superclass. They can also invoke the constructors of the superclass by using the super keyword. Inheritance is very important in Java because it allows you to add on to existing classes and this in turn makes it more convenient and efficient. On the other hand aggregation refers to a has-a relationship. Meaning, they are one way relationships or that something belongs to one class. For example if we say that a kitchen has-a oven or that a department has-a teacher. If we say the two examples in the opposite way, they won't make sense such as, the teacher has-a department or an oven has-a kitchen. This is different from inheritance because aggregation does not have a direct relationship with its classes. They are reusable and have more flexibility. Let me show a demonstration of the two topics:

class Vehicle { // is-a relationship Vehicle is superclass/ Bicycle subclass private String color;
      public void vehicleInfo(){
            System.out.println("Vehicle Color= "+color +);
      public void setColor(String color) {
class Bicycle extends Vehicle{ // Bicycle is a Vehicle, Bicycle has-a Tire public void BicycleDemo(){ Tire tire = new Tire();
            MarutiEngine.add();
public class Engine { public void add(){
            System.out.println("Tire added: ");

An abstract class is a class that is usually open for all classes to implement. Abstract classes let subclasses override or give abstract methods a body. An abstract class can have methods with a body that are not abstract methods. However, if a normal class has an abstract method that makes the whole class abstract. Abstract classes cannot be implemented. They are designed in such a way that some other class has to do it for that particular class. However this is why it is so important, useful and efficient. This method saves the time of making a new class or methods and properties for classes because it allows us to have a version of the methods in the abstract class and the class itself because it doesn't have its implementation meaning we can design that as per our needs. One way to recognize abstract classes and abstract methods is that when making abstract classes we write abstract on the left of the class name and in abstract methods we start the method signature with the abstract keyword and instead of having curly braces after the parenthesis to write arguments in the parameter we end it by adding a semicolon because nothing goes in its body. On the other hand, unlike abstract classes where you can have methods with a body as well as abstract methods, you cannot have any methods that have implementations. An interface is usually not in a direct relationship with any classes. When they are implemented by another class they are called using the implements keyword. Let me show a demonstration of abstract classes and interfaces:

     public abstract void sound(); // abstract method
public class Dog extends Animal{ // extends Animal class public void sound(){ // implementation of the abstract method System.out.println("Woof");
}
```

interface Polygon { // interface void getArea(int length, int breadth); // method with no implementation

class Rectangle implements Polygon { // Rectangle class implements Polygon public void getArea(int length, int breadth) { // implementation of method

    System.out.println("The area of the rectangle is " + (length * breadth));
